10 Key Messages and Requests

of the WHO / WHA Resolution on Sepsis

1. Each year, sepsis causes approximately six million deaths worldwide, most of which are preventable.
2. Sepsis is a syndromic response to infection and the final common pathway to death from most infectious diseases.
3. Sepsis represents the most vital indication for the responsible use of effective antimicrobials for human health.
4. The UN Member States urgently need to implement and promote measures for prevention, such as clean childbirth practices, infection prevention practices in surgery, improvements in sanitation, nutrition and delivery of clean water.
5. Many vaccine-preventable diseases are a major contributor to sepsis in children and adults; national immunization programmes are needed urgently.
6. Sepsis is an emergency that requires time-critical actions and improved training of health care professionals and laypeople.
7. The UN Member States urgently need to implement and promote measures for prevention, such as clean childbirth practices, infection prevention practices in surgery, and improvements in sanitation, nutrition and delivery of clean water.
8. Public awareness needs to be raised and encouraged, for example by using the term 'sepsis' when communicating with patients, relatives, and other parties, or by supporting World Sepsis Day, every year on September 13.
9. Integrated approaches to the prevention and clinical management of sepsis are urgently needed, including access to appropriate health care for survivors.
10. The International Classification of Diseases should be applied and improved to establish surveillance and profile surveillance systems.
